Spectrum of need in our community

Solutions and needed services vary across the spectrum of need.

While the chronically homeless and provision of basic shelter draws much of the spotlight, there is a continuum that must be addressed to fulfill our shared need for safe, affordable housing.

Housing stability: a complex web of issues

Add the intersection of organizational charters, non-profit fund raising, national & local politics, personal perspectives and bias...

Maslow: Levels of Need in the Hierarchy Interact and Influence Response to Crisis and Resilience

Social / Psychological Actualization and Integration

Safety / Physical Security / Stability

Physiological / Biological Needs

Brain chemistry is now understood to function in relation to needs being met. The core theory that base levels of stability in basic needs influence and enable successful fulfillment of more complex needs is complemented by understanding needs in relation to trauma, and adverse childhood experiences (ACEs).

Paths and Solutions: Steps and Cycles

Stability and Self-Sufficiency

The appropriate goal for many is true self-sufficiency and stability. However, financial or personal crises can undermine past success. Failure out of housing may be a repeating cycle if adequate resilience is not developed.

Unsheltered/Unhoused Unstable

Housing instability, or the loss of housing, can set in motion long-lasting physical and psychological impacts. Mitigating these impacts through rapid re-housing can be critical in the first 6 weeks after loss of housing.

Supported, Goal Driven, Accountable

Intensive supports may not be required long-term as confidence builds, and new skills/habits solidify. However, ongoing case management, tenant supports, and efforts to ensure social re-integration may be required.

Rebuilding and Skill (re)Development

Focused efforts to address immediate basic needs must be accompanied by broader efforts to build or re-establish skills and habits required to successfully regain/retain housing.

Solutions must “do enough, for long enough.” Failure to retain housing is not uncommon, and solutions must address the unique needs of the individual or household, and accommodate the possibility of repeated failures on a path to stability. Systems and solutions should be “trauma informed,” culturally appropriate, and focused on short and long-term needs.

How does SafePlace help?

- Part of a continuum of needed housing options
  - Distributed response to poverty and shared needs across the community
  - Neighborhood placements leverage scarce property, create a more diverse neighborhood that reflects the entire community
  - Coordinated Community Response
    - Supported by City and County
    - Supported by a rich network of community partners
    - Operated by an experienced organization based in the value of collaboration

What does SafePlace offer?

- Management of construction and placement of microshelter units, support for permitting
  - Vetting of clients for medical, criminal background, barriers to housing
  - Case management and connections to services across the community to support client progress on goals
  - Weekly visits by program staff to assess conditions, engage with clients, address any issues with the unit or residents
  - Basic needs support – food connections, healthcare connections, clothing and other needs as needed/able

How can you help?

- Political activity and advocacy: insist that your elected officials address the topic of affordable housing and homelessness in their campaigns and policy
  - Support a more diverse community (economic, racial, educational) and programs that reflect that diversity
  - Sustain the radical idea that all are worthy of love, respect, and critical resources to live a safe and healthy life - food, shelter, warmth, health care, community
  - Give - time, skills, contacts, resources
